

Health Sciences Professional Development: Fostering Psychological Safety

Psychological safety is a true necessity in healthcare education as we cultivate an environment where all staff and learners can voice concerns, admit mistakes and provide critical feedback without fear of retribution. On Wednesday, June 12, learn more about psychological safety from Jessica Seaman, EdD, (pictured left) assistant professor and assistant dean for faculty development, and Poonam Sharma, professor and chair of pathology, both in the Creighton University School of Medicine, from noon to 1 p.m. MST. Basics of Simulation Course

Preceptor and Instructor Training, June 27

St. Joseph's Hospital and Medical Center Learning Institute & Simulation Center will host two upcoming one-day courses for preceptors, educators and faculty to teach using simulation concepts on June 27 and July 25. The interactive course is intended to give participants an understanding of simulation as a teaching strategy, understand the basic functioning of a high-fidelity simulator, write a basic scenario and develop skills to facilitate a debrief session. There are two upcoming opportunities. Admission is free for Creighton faculty. Read more.
