GOOD CHEER

The happy, holy, holiday season has come again to gladden the heart of the world, to lift the gloom of war and to hold out anew the hope of peace on earth to men of good will. From sodden, shell shattered field, from reeking trench, from battered city and desolate home there must go up to the All High as never before, a prayer for the triumph of the Prince of Peace and today as never before an embattered world must realize the folly and futility of that reversion to savagery which would look for lasting success at the hands of brute force unguided by the saving doctrines of Him whose birthday is now the cause of universal celebration.

Many a home prays today with redoubled fervor for the return of peace and the restoration to the family circle of loved ones now busy with the rough task of war. In these sentiments the university shares for more than three hundred of her sons have responded to the nation's call and their return to the old school when their full duty has been performed, will be the occasion for a rejoicing deep-seated and sincere. Until that happy moment, she, like so many others whose dear ones have been called away by war, must continue to hope and pray for the realization of the angels' Christmas song of peace on earth to men of good will. In this hour of common sorrow, she sympathizes with the mothers and fathers who have so splendidly sacrificed their sons on the altar of liberty and democracy, and she only hopes that in God's good time their heroism may find fitting reward.

COLLEGE SPIRIT

Men, money and spirit have been described as the three requisites for the successful conduct of a great war; with equal propriety they might be regarded as the essentials of university progress. Of the three, however, spirit is immeasurably the most important for it can produce the other two, but men and money, without spirit, can never make a success of anything, least of all a university.

College spirit is often underestimated as a factor for healthy growth and the "rah, rah" boys are tolerated rather than encouraged as if they were an excrement of college life, a curious phenomenon, a liability, or at least a danger rather than an asset. Parades and yells and miscellaneous demonstrations are sometimes frowned upon as crudities of college life, as outbursts of mob instinct rather than as evidence of that collegiate solidarity without which no school can prosper.

Of course no one would champion rowdyism whatever the banner under which it masquerades, and it goes without saying that there are many exhibitions of alleged college spirit which represent sheer excess, but within reasonable limits there is no finer spectacle than that spontaneous outpouring of high spirit which welds the student body into a tremendous force, not turbulent but care-free, not vicious but vigorous, not lawless but responsive to the maxim that in union there is strength.

It is this spirit which takes form in the feeling so graphically pictured by Dean Hipple at the recent foot ball rally and which finds voice in the statement that "This is my university, my team, my gymnasium. Because they are mine, I am profoundly interested in them and will see to it that they prosper".

College spirit, dominated by sentiments like these, must prove well nigh irresistible. Not only will it imbue the students with a deep sense of responsibility for the welfare of the institution, but it will make them hesitate to neglect any opportunity for their own improvement, realizing, as they must, that the strength of the units must determine and measure the strength of the whole. Ungentlemanly conduct, the exhibition of mean traits of character, selfishness, penuriosity, waste of time, dangerous associations will not only go unceremoniously into the list of forbidden things, but these negative contributions will be splendidly supplemented by constructive suggestions, by concerted action for the upbuilding of the school.

Every student will not only strive to attain his own maximum at his collegiate tasks, but he will cultivate a broader outlook which will make him truly a citizen of the world and as such interested in the progress of higher educational institutions whose contribution to the common good is incalculable. He will see to it that promising young men are encouraged to enroll under the banner of his alma mater, that recruits are obtained for the various athletic activities, for the debating teams, the dramatic association, the glee club, the orchestra, the band and the numerous other organizations which play so important a part in the development of the school.

When occasion offers, he will see that the resources of the institution are enriched, either by gifts of money or by contributions toward the libraries and museums for he will feel that this is his university, whose success will be his success and whose failure will be his own. In the light of sentiments like these college spirit will seem a sacred thing, worthy of cultivation and safe-keeping, and he who contributes, even a little, toward the development of this spirit may well feel that his effort has not been in vain.
