CREIGHTON MEN IN PRIMARIES

Contestants for High Positions in Nation, State, County and City.

James H. Hanley.

In response to petitions from voters of Washington, Douglas and Sarpy Counties, James H. Hanley, alumnus of the Creighton College of Law, has become candidate for the democratic nomination for Congress for the second district of Nebraska, subject to the primaries of July 18. Mr. Hanley was born in Holt County, Neb., July 4, 1881, and after attending the Fremont Normal College and teaching school, finished his Law course at Creighton in 1910. Later he did post-graduate work at the Law school of Georgetown University at Washington. He was secretary to the late Congressman C. O. Lobeck from 1911 to 1919, and is now member of the firm of Hanley and Hopkins. He has managed five congressional campaigns, besides the campaign for Mayor Dahlman at the municipal election of 1921. In a letter to John H. Mithen, announcing his intention to become a candidate, he says:

"There is an opportunity for service in Washington looking to a more frugal and simplified government; a reduction of the inequalities and burdens of taxation; the supplying of a more ready market for our surplus manufactured and agricultural products; the creation of a Bank of Nations; the connecting of the unemployed with needed employment; a more equitable administration of the Federal Reserve and Farm Loan Acts; the enactment of substantial bonus legislation for the men who served the country in the world war; the establishing of more amicable relations and cooperation between capital and labor by means of active governmental mediation; prompt, efficient and active representation of the people of this district before the departments, bureaus, and commissions of the federal government, and other important subjects that will come up from time to time; therefore the petitions are acceptable to me and will so notify the Secretary of State."

Dan B. Butler.

The candidacy of City Commissioner, Dan B. Butler, for the governorship of Nebraska, was announced in the Courier last May. He has been commissioner for four years, and is on the list for the Democratic ticket. He attended Creighton in the nineties.

Wm. J. McNichols.

Wm. J. McNichols, alumnus of the College of Law, who was elected state deputy of the Knights of Columbus in May, is Democratic candidate for Lieutenant-Governor.

Dale P. Stough.

Dale P. Stough, LL. B., '11, of Grand Island, Neb., is a candidate at the Democratic primaries for state railway commissioner. Mr. Stough was registrar and librarian of the College of Law from 1909 to 1911, under Dean Paul L. Martin. He practiced four years at Broken Bow with Judge J. R. Dean, now of the Supreme Court, and was for three years with Chief Justice Morrissey. He is now specializing in rate and utility law practice.

COMMENCEMENT AGAIN SURPASSES ALL RECORDS

One Hundred and Thirty-Five
Degrees; Twenty-Three Certificates.

At the thirty-second annual commencement, held Saturday morning, June 3, Creighton University gave diplomas and certificates to 158 students from thirteen states and two foreign countries. Evidence of the University's expansion is seen in the fact that the number of recipients was greater by ten than last year, although last year Creighton granted more diplomas than at any previous commencement in its history.

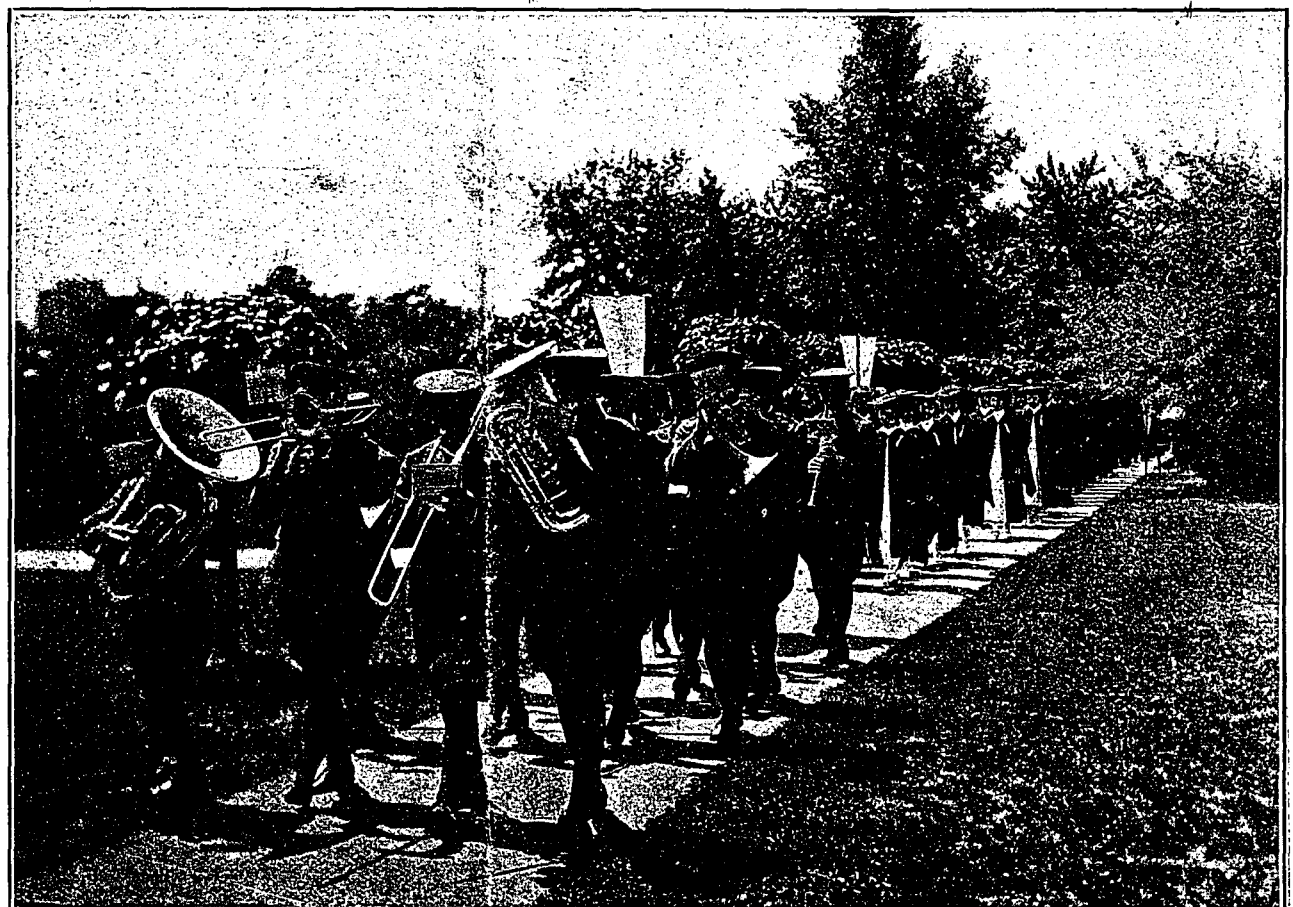

The exercises began at 10:30, with the usual baccalaureate procession of graduates and faculty in cap and gown, through the trees and over the lawn of the campus, with the University's military band in the lead. A cinematograph and other photographs were taken.

At the assembly in the large hall of the gymnasium, President McCormick announced that the graduates of 1922, following the example set by those of the past few years, had donated $25,000 in insurance policies to the University as an endowment fund.

The degrees conferred at the assembly were: Bachelor of Arts, 15; Bachelor of Philosophy, 5; Bachelor of Science in Medicine, 31; Doctor of Medicine, 21; Bachelor of Laws, 18; Doctor of Dental Surgery, 16; Pharmaceutical Chemist, 3; Graduate in Pharmacy, 26; Thirteen first grade teachers' certificates were given, and

PIETAS

There are words which contain as much thought as whole essays. There are words which speak to us and instruct us. To keep them before our minds and ponder them is like reading an interesting book, and at every turn of thought, as at a new page, we find something which we did not appreciate before, or which, long appreciated, we delight to recall. Such is the Latin word "Pietas". What student of the classics has not been charmed by it as one is charmed on meeting a man of superior personality? To attempt its adequate translation without a context is futile, as it would be futile to attempt a brief and adequate characterization of Lincoln or of Newman or Mercier or Foch or Pius X. It must be seen in action as it were, to be known. Pietas is the love of a son for his father, of a husband for his wife, of a mother for her child, of a friend for his friend, of a patriot for his country, of a strong-souled man for God. "Pius Aeneas" is so called because of his tenderness for Creusa, his fidelity to Anchises, his loyalty to his companions, his reverence for the gods, his undying love for Troy, which the flames of his native city and the trackless wanderings of seven years only served to intensify.

But just as the picture of a great man may show more of his character than a page of writing, so it is sometimes possible to embody in a picture a vast deal of the meaning of a great word. This is what a Creighton alumnus has done for pietas. The picture printed on the first page of the present issue was originated by J. J. Cordes, Ph. B., '15, when engaged in classical studies after graduation. Done by him in colors when the war was emphasizing the duty and the sacredness of love of country, it was recently adapted by Stephen J. Narkevitz, of the Creighton High School. It is reproduced as fittingly showing forth the spirit of Independence Day, the American ideal of patriotism.

The love of country and the love of God contain in themselves all noble human loves. The former is inspired by the latter, and both are sacred. An excess of either is an impossibility. Patriotism is nothing else than love, and Christian patriotism is Christian charity. It is an application of the "second commandment, which is like to the first." Though the passion of men may distort their ideas, true patriotism has as little of hatred in it as of weakness. It may rouse to a righteous indignation, and even to violent action in the avenging of wrongs and the defense of justice, but always, even when it strikes its strongest blow, it has "malice toward none, charity for all." When hatred is joined to it, it ceases to be pure; but the purer the flame, the more closely assimilated to the holy flame of divine love, the hotter it should be. A chauvinist can love wrongly, but a patriot cannot love too much.

Several of the justices of the Supreme Court of Nebraska were on the stage with the president and deans of the university, and the oath was administered to the law graduates and to Lieutenant Downing by Chief Justice Andrew Morrissey.

Charles Upson Clark, Ph. D., formerly of Yale university, gave the commencement address. Taking for his subject "The American Scholar," he spoke of the scholarship, broadness of mind, and love of country which should mark the university man. The wealth of ideas that filled the speech was presented with charming elegance of language and polish of delivery, and adorned with a richness of humorous illustration that gave a delightful tone of cultured informality.

In speaking of broadmindedness and of what he called the international viewpoint, Dr. Clark said that we ought to have a sympathetic appreciation of the qualities and foibles of other nations, that we ought to overcome the spirit of criticism with which we harm ourselves as well as others, and to follow the ideal expressed in the French proverb, "Qui tout comprend, tout pardonne." He deprecated the intolerance which is ever apt to show itself, not only in international, but even in domestic relations. He urged the importance of knowing the greatness of our own country from every point of view—the physical as well as the historical and political.

In urging the perfect knowledge of the English tongue, and the cultivation of excellence in it in speaking and writing, he recommended the reading and memorizing of the English classics; and on the subject of the Latin and Greek classics he reported a conversation he had had with Pope Pius XI in Milan when the Holy Father was Cardinal. Cardinal Ratti had asked the American scholar, whom he knew personally, whether it was true that the literary models of antiquity were being more and more neglected in America; and on being told that it was unfortunately true, he had said that he could not understand how modern times could be properly appreciated except in the light of the ancient classics.
