Creighton Conducting Research on Treatment for PTSD

Creighton University Medical Center's Psychiatry Research Clinic is conducting an investigational medication study for the treatment of Post-traumatic Stress Disorder (PTSD). The U.S. Food and Drug Administration currently approves the medication for the treatment of bipolar disorder and schizophrenia. Creighton investigators are studying whether it may also be effective for PTSD. PTSD is one of the most common medical psychiatric conditions, with approximately 14 percent of Americans having or contracting the illness. The disorder occurs from being exposed to severe stress or trauma. If not properly treated, the disorder can develop into a chronic condition. Individuals diagnosed with PTSD are more likely to abuse alcohol and drugs, which only impairs the psychological condition. Symptoms of the disorder include nightmares, poor sleep, anxiety, depression and aloofness. The aid of medication in helping to treat the disorder can help with the symptoms of anxiety and depression, as well as improve sleep. The new medications are not habit-forming and typically do not obstruct an individual's mental and physical capacities. Presently, the Psychiatry Research Center at CUMC is enlisting patients between the ages of 19 and 65, and who are suffering from the disorder, to participate in the investigational medical study. For evaluations and referrals, please call 345-8828, ext. 8. Participants in the study must be able to attend weekly clinic visits for 10 to 12 weeks.
